

Fellow gorgeous queer woman to have hot lesbian pash session with in Margaret Court Arena (because it's the only way to truly show Margaret) - Look I know this year will actually mark two years since the shit-storm that was the plebiscite. I know the 'yes' vote won, and maybe it's petty of me to still give a shit, but I hate that Margaret Court Arena hasn't been renamed.

I hate that despite the initial uproar that Court's infamous tirade attracted - against 'gay lobbyists' after Qantas expressed their support for marriage equality - we've somehow reached the one year anniversary of that all-important yes, with a significant Melbourne landmark still bearing the name of someone who is synonymous with arguably the most homophobic public remarks made during the entire plebiscite period.

Personally, the Margaret Court Arena acts as a glaring reminder of the toxic and damaging rhetoric that was needlessly inflicted on each Australian identifying as LGBTQIA+ during that vote; and I hate that by allowing the arena to keep its current name, we've collectively implied that Court's achievements as an athlete, make her established reputation - even before the plebiscite - for making deeply hurtful and homophobic public statements, somehow tolerable.

The honour of having such an important public facility in your name - and one that's use is not limited to tennis - is a privilege, and it comes with a basic responsibility to be a figure whose worthy of our attention and respect.

So - and I'm sorry for being incredibly crass, but since the public discussion around renaming Margaret Court Arena has fallen on deaf ears and subsequently faded, then maybe the only way to be marginally at peace with that name is the knowledge that if I ever saw Margaret Court in person I could look her square in the eye and say 'well at the very least I tarnished your precious court with my big lesbian ways and visible existence MUHAHHHA!!!!'. You probably wouldn't even need to directly tell her anyway - Margaret could probably sense that something terrible had just happened.

So if you too are a fan of ironic justice let's meet up and kiss - something that Margaret Court would in no way be effected by, yet would choose to be deeply offended by nonetheless. Maybe if it works out we can hold our wedding in Margaret Court Arena.
